The reports of the census taken in the Western Provinces about a year ago were given out recently and Alderson, reported under the name of Carleton is given as having a population of 124,000. One-Two-Three, doesn't it. There is nothing to it. Everybody around here must go in for the Roosevelt theory before the 1924 census.

C. Small who for several months has played the leading juvenile role at the Union Bank dances. Saturday for his old home near London, Ont. We are led to believe that a big Touring Car recently purchased by his father is during the prodigious home. He is succeeded by Sam Clashman, formerly of Indiana and latterly employed by J. E. Ames.

P. W. Parry, Agent of the Alberta Radio Elevator has been transferred to the Calgary Office. Mr. Penckshon of Bow Island succeeded him. A Mr. W. Shields left Wednesday again, he at her old home in Pocatello, Wash. Her many friends sincerely regret her departure from the district.

Arms D.C. will arrive in Alderson next week to reside with her sister Mrs. Hutchinson. Miss Burdell will be another addition to the town's musical talent.

Miss Jessie Cairnes who has been in the staff of the Hotel Alderson for about two years is leaving this week and after spending a few days at her home in Tide Lake will take a trip to Ontario. Miss A. D. Dharlow, a daughter of Mrs. E. J. Dharlow of Royal will take Miss Cairnes's place.

RED CROSS

A Dance in Johnson's Hall was given by the Association on the evening of Victoria Day. Although mostly arranged it was a jolly affair and a gratifying success netting the Fund, $21.10. Capade music was supplied chiefly by Mrs. Wood and the Messrs. Hagg.

The First of a series of Afternoon teas to be given every Thursday in the United Church was given today Thursday, the hostesses being Mrs. C. F. Starr and Mrs. V. E. Starr. The proceeds were $9.50.

The ladies who will act as Hostesses next Thursday afternoon are Mesdames Wood and Hagg. Admission only 15c.

The Society is pleased to acknowledge membership fees of $2.00 each from Mesdames Steel, Scallard and Thompson. Also a donation of $1.00 from Mrs. Wagar.

Mrs. J. W. Rosenburg received an interesting letter this week from her son, Private Gordon Rosenburg in France. While passing over a battle ground recently where some Canadians had fallen he picked up several snapshots that showed a Medicine Hat address and the name Alderson. These were enclosed in his letter and Mrs. Rosenburg has been instrumental in turning them over to rightfull parties at the Hat. The boy was recently killed and the pictures will prove a keepsake for his mother.

His many friends and acquaintances in Alderson and district will regret to learn that L. P. Reighy is very seriously ill. All hope for a speedy recovery. In the meantime his shoe repair shop is closed.

Chris Hildahl took a load of logs to Suffield on Tuesday and sold to Dan D. Doyle. For the 8 pickers weighing in all 2283 he only got a measly check for $328.35.

H. S. Gerow who was recently appointed Homestead Inspector has purchased the Adland property on Dowell Avenue and will shortly take up residence there. There is a report current that C. F. Starr who occupies the property at present is erecting a modern residence on the Hammer property.

Rev. T. Taylor, Mrs. Taylor and Baby Elizabeth Taylor are in Calgary during Conference week. The services Sunday evening will be conducted by Mr. F. J. Conn.

In our issue of May 17th in editorial note we said the News was pleased to be on the side lines in the present Provincial Elections. Our sympathy goes out to our old friend Percy W. Stone of the Bismarck Mail who was turned home last week by the Conservative Directors of the Paper for daring to accept a Paid in Advances Page in the Liberal Campaign. The Hon. Charles Mitchell. Required the papers were all printed before the office was noted by the ex-patriated Directors and after releasing Mr Stone they were forced to work late into the night of Victoria Day with Shears cutting out the layout and Paid in Advances. Mr Paredi, the Conservative Candidate, although a Director of the paper, himself carried only a small single column ad.

She had her way, of course, as a gentle woman always does when for once she takes the reins in dealing with a man. Ciprian, not unwillingly, acknowledging her to be in the right, obeyed, and throwing himself on the sofa, said with an air of tired contentment which was almost tragic:

"Well, then, you are satisfied now. Thank you," said Mabin gravely. She slipped out of the room, called the servant, and directed her to go at once for a doctor who lived near, and who had attended Mr. Wreat. Then she went quickly back to the sitting room, where, by this time, Ciprian was beginning to feel the effects of the exertions of the day, and was lying in a state akin to stupor.

She seated herself at a little distance, moving so softly that he never once opened his eyes, and there she sat, with clasped hands, watching him, and thanking God that for a few moments at least he had lost all remembrance of his distressing condition. As for her, the first she had now to bear a twofold burden: the knowledge of the peril in which she lay, the man who had been the pivot of her youth's romance, and the other, the aching thought that her little Dibs might be lost to her, to them both, for ever.

Neither the one thought nor the other could she lay aside, and that to brood on either of them would be to reduce herself to a state of helplessness, just when all her courage and all her strength might be needed for a great emergency; she resolutely thrust them from her, and forced herself to think only of the present needs of the man before her, as she waited in silence for the doctor's arrival.

When he came, the noise of his entrance roused Ciprian, who looked round him vaguely and called out: "Dibs," as if forgetting where he was.

Then he came to himself when he caught sight of Mabin's anxious face, for she smiled faintly, nodded, closed his eyes, and fell back again upon the sofa. The doctor scented inquiry by the sofa, and looked inquiringly at Mabin.

"A brother of yours?" he asked. Ciprian caught the doctor's question, and answered for her: "No, not a brother. The nothing to her, Doctor. But I should like to be something to her."

"As it is, things have gone worse, and I want you to do it for me. I am up, set me away, to a nursing home, I want you to do it for me. I can be of use to everybody's word, out of my mouth."

He had uttered these words with an effort, speaking a short phrase, and then waiting for a moment, as if to go on. At last his voice died away, and he lay quietly, and apparently have lost the sense of what he was saying.

"Rather awkward," said the doctor, turning to Mabin, "for you, isn't it?"

"No," said Mabin steadily. "I'm glad he's here. I'm glad if I can do anything. Doctor, you know the boy, our Julius? This is his father."

"Oh I see. An old friend, well. I'm sorry he's chosen to be ill here, because he'll want a good deal of attention. Where's your mother?"

"At Brighton."

"The doctor started."

"But, my dear Miss Mabin—"

Marketing Farm Produce

By Mrs. McBeath, Headingley, Manitoba.

She interrupted him. "I only trouble you about him. Can you send a nurse, someone who knows her business, to help me? He's not ill, it's an injury to his head, and then pneumonia. And today he had a long journey, let a sick-room, to do it. It's what's best for the matter."

The doctor considered. "It would be best for him, certainly, not to be moved. But, on the other hand, for you it would be decidedly better that he should be moved. Well, then, I'll have a question of what is to be done. He is to stay here."

Ciprian, who was alternately alive to what was being said, and dead to everything but flimsy dreams, woke up, and started to his elbow.

"Stay here! I can't stay here! I'm not going to stay. Doctor, make this child listen to reason, and let them to send for a cab for me. Quick to you can. I—I hardly know what I'm doing—and—"

He was struggling to his feet. The doctor kept him down, and there he sat, staring at him.

Mabin hung in the background, not daring to speak.

And then, during the slight pause that ensued, they all heard a rattling sound, the gate breath, and Ciprian's tramp across the floor towards the window.

And then, for the first time, he heard the tramp up the stone flags of the garden, the man's footsteps, and something in the sound made her gasp.

She peeped behind the blind and a low cry escaped her lips in spite of her self-control.

There was a taxi cab at the gate. Ciprian was a policeman in uniform. The doctor hurried to the door, and he looked out behind the blind.

Ciprian started up. "He's coming to see him," he said.

Mabin sprang towards him, and clinging to his arm, led him towards the sick room, which was her mother's bedroom.

"He's in there, oh, take him in," she implored, turning to whisper hoarsely to the doctor.

The doctor looked grave and puzzled, and uncertain what to do. Mabin's face was white, and she clutched his arm, and he looked out behind the blind.

Perhaps one of the biggest problems on the farm is the marketing of the produce profitably. It is a phase of farming in which we need help and instruction just as much as in growing crops or raising live stock, the art of selling, and the regulation of prices need to be studied, just as much in farming as in mercantile business of any kind.

Marketing is where the farm women most often fall down. They may raise poultry or make butter, but if they cannot market their produce profitably the most of their work goes for nothing. In a new country like the west, it is long before staple crops and reliable markets get established; meantime selling and buying are easier, but the conditions are still so that both producer and consumer.

The problem of the woman farmer town is different from that of the city. The woman in country places depends on the market. Now the country storekeeper has his problem just as well as the farmer. And if we are ever to get at the root of the marketing conditions, both sides of the question.

Take the matter of butter. How few women really make first-class butter. We all know the woman who churns and churns, and when it turns out "sippy," remarks that it's "good for nothing." This is the worst of it. "Do you save your money?" she asks. "I'll save my money. I'll have to cheat the grocer and the baker."

a price much higher than they could have got for ordinary apples at home.

This was true co-operation. Why not get together, study the markets and possibilities of your district, and whether butter, cheese, or some other product, will be most profitable, and all centre their energies on that one thing.

Keep one kind of poultry, whether for laying or for table fowls, so that when a buyer comes he can fill an order for several crates of the same kind, instead of mixed lots of big and small for which he cannot give a good price. A community effort in this way gets up its name. Buyers tell each other, and so a business gets established.

Were creameries, egg circles, and poultry-fattening stations established generally, there would result a standard market and standard prices in place of the uncertain prices and haphazard selling, which are the discouragement of most country women today.

Exterminating Couch Grass

Successful Method Used in Manitoba

Experimentation has shown that when the land for the Experimental Station now located at Morden, was purchased last year, it was found to be badly infested with couch grass (also called quack, twich or quack grass).

In an effort to exterminate this pest, sixty-five acres of that part of the farm which appeared to be the worst infested was treated as follows:

About the first of June, it was ploughed four inches deep and well harrowed. The spring tithing culture was then used, and the roots were left to the top of the ground. Next, a chain harrow was used, and the whole area was covered with the soil.

In the spring of 1916, it was well harrowed three times and cross-ploughed with barley at the rate of 1-2 bushels per acre.

This was again ploughed and cross-ploughed with the soil, and it was almost impossible to find a blade of couch grass on the whole area.

It is now a fine field, and it is almost impossible to find a blade of couch grass on the whole area.

Urban Gardening

Regina Recognized as Pioneer in the "Vacant Lot Garden Movement"

Not only has Regina been a pioneer in the movement for encouraging cultivation of vacant lot gardens, but the movement has made greater strides here than in any other city of its size on the continent. The fame of Regina as a garden city has gone broadcast, and frequently requests for information are received from other cities contemplating taking up this movement.

Many have requests for information from many points in Canada, both in the west and in the east, but a number of American cities have heard of the movement as conducted in Regina, and only the other day a request was received by the secretary of the vacant lot garden movement from a town in Illinois, for information as to how the scheme was working out here. The gentleman stated that he had heard of the great strides which had been made in the movement here, and wished to get as much information as possible to proceed with the plan in another city.

Wide publicity was given to Regina by reason of Mr. Miller, of this city, who is secretary of the dry farming movement, taking prices in 1916. The credit exhibition last year, potatoes grown on vacant lots, all as a result of the many inquiries received as to gardening conditions in this city generally.—Regin. Leader.

Butter Production in Winnipeg Over 2,000,000 pounds of butter was manufactured in Winnipeg in 1916. The creamery made 200,000 pounds; T. Eaton and company 500,000; the City creamery 200,000; Holland company 200,000; Manitoba creamery, 200,000; and Dominion creamery, 200,000.

In proportion to its population Norway is the greatest seafaring nation in the world. On January 1, 1916, its mercantile marine consisted of 3,486 vessels, with a tonnage of 272,991, or an average of more than one ton for each inhabitant and practically the whole fleet is owned by individuals.

Life Saving Devices

Submarine warfare has resulted in numerous improvements in life preservers and buoys. The passages on any ship that sails the Atlantic today are likely to find themselves bobbing about in the icy water with no support but a cork jacket. Some time ago a number of sailors on a torpedoed ship saved their lives at night by signalling to rescuers with little electric flash lamps. This principle has now been incorporated into the latest life buoy by an attachment which carries electric flash lamps as part of its equipment. The lamps burn steadily as soon as the buoy hits the water, and serve to indicate the position of the person aboard, to any boat that may be searching for survivors.

The Municipal Hospitals Act

How to Incorporate a Hospital District and Provide for Operation of a Hospital.

Under the Municipal Hospitals Act passed at the recent Session of the Legislature, the Minister of Municipal Affairs is authorized to divide the province into Hospital Districts. He is also charged with the responsibility of supplying plans, specifications, estimates, advice on sites and management and such other assistance as he may be able to give. The bringing into existence of a hospital depends upon the initiative of the people. When only one municipality is concerned, all that is necessary to initiate action is petition signed by twenty-five electors and agreed to by the municipal council. When more than one council is concerned, the consent of the other council or councils is necessary, as well as the petition from the electors within the municipality. The preliminary work being done, the council shall appoint a hospital board. In the case of one municipality undertaking the work, the board shall consist of three members of the council and three electors outside the council. When there are two municipalities in the proposed district each council shall appoint three representatives, one being a member of the council, and two electors not councillors. When the appointments are made the names are sent to the Minister who names a convenor and the place and date of meeting for organization. The board has power—

To appoint such officials as may be necessary and to fix the amount of remuneration;

To determine the site and arrange for purchase of same;

To arrange for the acquiring or erection of a suitable building;

To make arrangements with any existing hospital, if preferred to undertake the establishment and maintenance of a separate institution;

To engage medical practitioners and nurses;

To arrange for financing the hospital, the preparation of estimates, etc., the municipality providing the money as for other municipal enterprises.

The levy for capital expenditure shall not be higher than two mills on the dollar.

As soon as the plans are approved by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the council shall prepare a by-law for submission to the electors, which must be voted on within three months.

For full information as to how to arrange for and conduct a Municipal Hospital under this Act, apply to

JOHN PERRIE,
Deputy Minister of Municipal Affairs.

The Trustees of Alderson School have greatly added to the looks of the place by the erection of a fence around the grounds, and the planting of several hundred promising trees.
